

POST TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER - DATA

1. The flashbacks keep coming back without warning.
2. I still have nightmares about what happened.
3. Certain sounds or smells trigger intense panic.
4. I feel like I'm constantly reliving the trauma.
5. I have repeated, distressing memories of the traumatic event that intrude without warning.
6. Loud noises make me jump out of my skin.
7. I avoid places that remind me of the trauma.
8. I cannot stop unwanted memories of the trauma from entering my mind no matter what I am doing.
9. The memories hit me like a truck randomly.
10. Distressing memories of what happened interrupt my concentration at work and at home.
11. I have repeated, upsetting dreams about the traumatic event that disturb my sleep.
12. I wake several times a week from nightmares in which the event is replaying in vivid detail.
13. I experience flashbacks in which I lose awareness of my surroundings and return to the trauma.
14. My body reacts strongly to reminders of the trauma — my heart races, I sweat, and I shake.
15. My heart races when I remember certain things.
16. I push away any thought or memory associated with the trauma because the distress is unbearable.
17. The trauma changed me completely.
18. I have strong negative beliefs about myself or the world that developed after the trauma — I feel permanently damaged.
19. Certain dates trigger severe emotional breakdowns.

POST TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER - DATA

20. I feel persistent negative emotions since the trauma — fear, horror, anger, guilt, and shame all at once.
21. I have lost interest in activities I used to care about since the traumatic event occurred.
22. The past still controls my present.
23. I have been irritable and had angry outbursts with little or no provocation since the trauma.
24. Since the accident I cannot drive past that intersection. My whole body shuts down.
25. The assault was years ago but my body still reacts like it is happening right now.